I. Objectives

The objective of this preliminary design review is to identify and discuss all possible website components, layouts, and design elements that may be included once a client is confirmed. This review aims to prepare the group by outlining potential page structures, design themes, and user interface features that align with common business needs. The goal is to establish a foundation for creating initial draft designs that can later be customized based on the chosen client's requirements.

II. Methods

During the group meeting, the following methods were used to conduct the preliminary design review:

1. Brainstorming of Website Pages

– The group listed all possible website pages typically needed by small businesses, such as Home, About, Services/Products, Gallery, Contact, and FAQs.

2. Layout Structure Planning

– Members discussed basic layout ideas, including header navigation, footer sections, banner/hero images, content blocks, and responsive design considerations.

3. Visual Style Discussion

– The group talked about possible color schemes, typography choices, button styles, and overall visual themes that could fit most types of clients.

4. Wireframe Preparation Plan

– Members planned how they will draft early wireframes using tools like Figma or Canva once the client is selected.

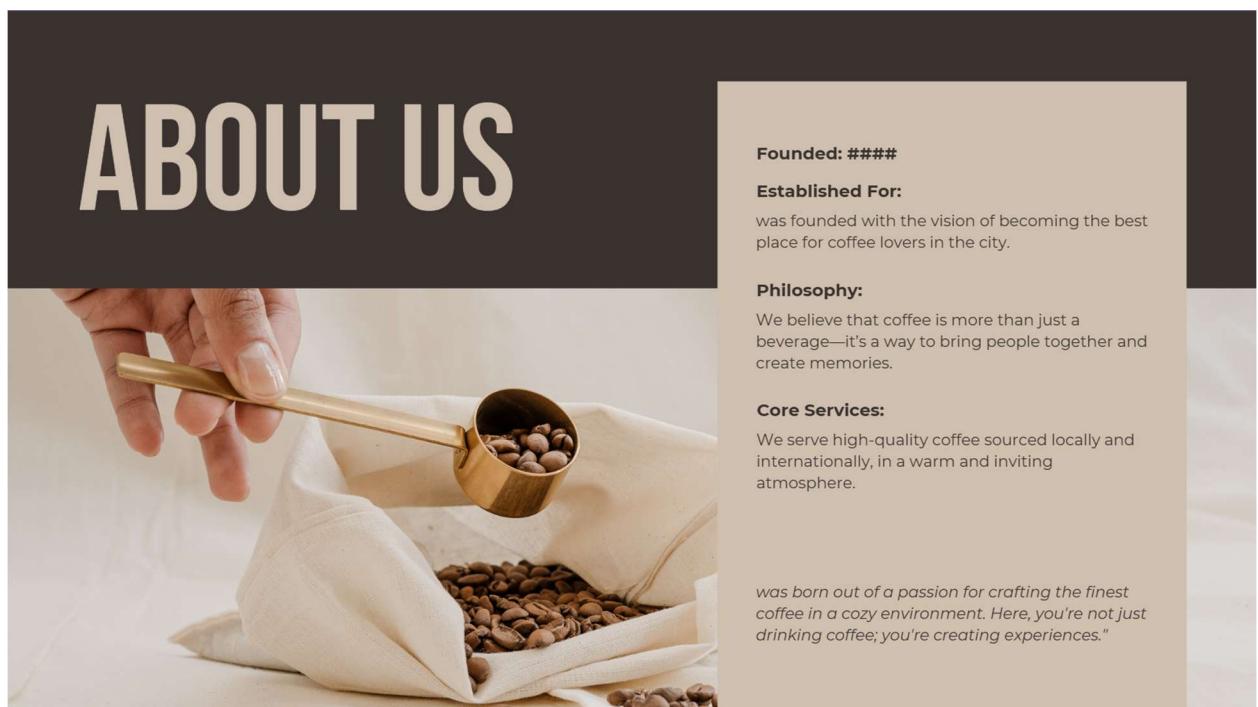

III. Results

The design review discussion resulted in a clear list of possible website components and structures that the group will consider when creating the initial design drafts:

- Home Page: Hero banner, welcome text, featured services/products, call-to-action buttons.

- About Page: Business background, mission and vision, team profiles (optional).

- Services/Products Page: Service descriptions, product listings, pricing options, service images.

At this stage, no final design decisions were made since the team is still in the process of securing a client. However, the group now has a complete structure ready for adaptation.

IV. Conclusion

The preliminary design review helped the group establish a strong foundation for the upcoming website project. By outlining possible website pages, features, and visual styles, the team is now prepared to begin the design process as soon as the client is confirmed. This early planning ensures that the team can efficiently create wireframes and adjust layouts to meet the specific needs of the chosen client, supporting a smoother development process in later phases.s
